

Sharon May

Iranian woman detained after taking clothes off at university in Tehran -

Updated 1:36 PM EST, Mon November 4, 2024

By Mohammed Tawfeeq, CNN

MENTAL HEALTH EXPLOITED AS A WOMAN PROTESTS HUMAN RIGHTS

It has become apparent when society finds a person objectionable according to the value system, we are all under, that immediately the claim of mental health is applied.

Are we in fact individuals in a free society, able to utilize freedom of speech or could we in fact be more like robots manipulated by schemas skilfully portrayed as societal models to benefit all.

To those who courageously stand alone to fight certain hypocrisies, beware. You may find yourself being hospitalized with a mental illness to ensure there is no panic among the masses.

Whether the protest is aimed at government or large business, they do not want attention bought about by any person willing to contest what they label, liberties.

Unfortunately for most of the population, they trust that what is in place is fair and reasonable when in fact one could say, sheep in wolves clothing.

This brilliant young woman had become so frustrated with being forced to live with depleting values that she did the extreme. Removing her clothes and parading in her underwear. Of course she was labelled as having a psychological disorder.

Enough of parading the crippling disease like it's something to be adorned. It's real, people suffer immeasurable causing many to end their lives. As a society we all need to respect the illness and give it and those who suffer, an understanding that we will not use it any longer as an out for human rights or any other objection that is challenged by individuals like this brave woman.